In the world of business and media, there are several strategies used to achieve success. One common strategy is to create a sensation by offering award-winning products that are exclusive to certain markets. By doing so, businesses attract attention and establish a long-lasting reputation. This is often done by providing unique products or services that differentiate a company from its competitors.

In media, advertisements are crucial for promoting these products. From traditional billboards to modern pop-up ads on websites, advertising plays a central role. Digital marketing has become increasingly popular, as it allows businesses to reach a variety of audiences across multiple platforms. Endorsements by celebrities also help to make products more appealing, especially when these famous figures are seen using the product in their social media posts.

FCE READING

Part 3: You are going to read a magazine article about students who traveled alone in Europe during their summer break. For questions 1–10, choose from the students (A–D). The students may be chosen more than once.

A. Maria Lopez

When I decided to travel alone across Europe, I was both excited and nervous. The first week was challenging because I wasn't used to planning everything myself. However, I quickly got into the rhythm and found that I loved the freedom of waking up and deciding on the spot where I'd go. While it could be a bit lonely at times, I met incredible people along the way, especially in hostels where travelers gather to share their stories. One memorable experience was hiking in the Alps; although I missed having someone to help with decisions, it was rewarding to manage everything on my own.

B. Liam O'Connor

I've always enjoyed the idea of traveling solo, and my trip to Europe didn't disappoint. I joined a small tour group for a part of my trip, and I appreciated not having to deal with the logistics of booking hotels and transport. This gave me more time to focus on enjoying the sights. On the other hand, sticking to the group's schedule could be limiting at times. Traveling alone also helped me appreciate how different people's attitudes and cultures are, as I met travelers from all over the world.

C. Emily Wang

Solo travel was something I'd wanted to try for a long time, and my summer in Europe gave me the chance to do it. I loved being able to spend time exploring museums and cities at my own pace. However, meal times were the hardest part — eating alone sometimes felt awkward, and I missed the company of friends and family. Still, this experience taught me the value of stepping out of my comfort zone. By the end of the trip, I felt more independent and capable of handling challenges.

D. Adam Fischer

At first, I wasn't sure if traveling alone was for me. I was worried about safety and whether I'd enjoy being by myself. But it turned out to be an incredible experience. One of the best parts was meeting like-minded people. For example, I met a group of travelers in Italy who shared my love of photography, and we ended up exploring together for a few days. I also discovered that choosing the best accommodations I could afford made a big difference in how much I enjoyed the trip. It's worth spending a little extra for comfort and safety when you're on your own.

Which student mentions...

1. feeling awkward during meal times? _____
2. meeting people with a shared interest? _____
3. the advantages of letting someone else manage travel plans? _____
4. enjoying the freedom to decide plans spontaneously? _____
5. becoming more confident as a result of the trip? _____
6. the importance of spending more for better accommodation? _____
7. having initial doubts about traveling alone? _____
8. feeling that group travel can sometimes be restrictive? _____
9. appreciating the opportunity to meet people from different backgrounds? _____
10. missing having someone to help make decisions? _____
