The Legend of Danau Panggang

A long time ago, there was a village in Kalimantan surrounded by green hills and rivers. The people lived peacefully and grew rice. Did they have enough food every year? Yes, they did. The land was fertile, and the river gave them fish. In the village, there was a kind young man named Danu. Did Danu help his family every day? Yes, he did. He worked hard in the rice fields.

One day, a stranger came to the village. Did the villagers know him? No, they did not. The stranger warned them, "Leave this village, or something bad will happen." Did the villagers believe him? No, they did not. They thought the stranger was lying. Danu, however, felt worried. Did he try to convince his friends to leave? Yes, he did. But no one listened to him.

That night, heavy rain fell. Did it stop quickly? No, it did not. The rain continued for days. The river overflowed and flooded the village. Did the villagers escape in time? No, they did not. Only Danu and a few people managed to climb the hill. When the rain stopped, a large lake appeared where the village used to be. Did the people call it Danau Panggang? Yes, they did.

The villagers believed the lake was magical. Did they remember the stranger's warning? Yes, they did. Every year, they held a ceremony by the lake to honor the spirits. Did they forget the story of Danu and the flood? No, they did not. The lake became a reminder to respect nature and listen to warnings.
