The Legend of Datu Kalampayan

A long time ago, in South Kalimantan, there was a boy named Muhammad Arsyad. Did he come from a rich family? No, he did not. His family was poor but very kind. Muhammad Arsyad loved to study. Did he read books every day? Yes, he did. He learned many things about Islam and became very smart.

One day, the Sultan of Banjar heard about Muhammad Arsyad. Did the Sultan invite him to the palace? Yes, he did. The Sultan sent him to Mecca to study. Did Muhammad Arsyad refuse the offer? No, he did not. He felt happy and honored. He studied in Mecca for many years. Did he return to Banjar after his studies? Yes, he did. He became a famous Islamic scholar.

When he returned, he taught the people about Islam. Did the people respect him? Yes, they did. They called him Datu Kalampayan. He wrote many books and helped the community. Did anyone doubt his teachings? No, they did not. His knowledge brought peace and unity to the land.

Datu Kalampayan passed away at an old age. Did the people forget about him? No, they did not. They remembered him as a great teacher and leader. Every year, people visited his grave to pray. Did his legacy continue? Yes, it did. His teachings still guide the people of South Kalimantan today.
