The Legend of Bukit Batu Hapu

A long time ago, in South Kalimantan, there was a small village near a big hill. Did the villagers live peacefully? Yes, they did. The land was beautiful and the people were kind. In the village, there was a young man named Angui. Did Angui like to work hard? No, he did not. He was lazy and often slept during the day.

One day, Angui's mother asked him to help in the rice field. Did he listen to her? No, he did not. He ignored her and went to the river instead. While he was there, a strange old man appeared. Did the old man look familiar? No, he did not. The old man said, "Angui, if you do not change, something bad will happen." Did Angui believe him? No, he did not. He laughed and walked away.

That night, a big storm came. Did the villagers feel afraid? Yes, they did. The wind blew hard, and the rain poured heavily. The next morning, the villagers saw something strange. The hill near the village had turned into stone. Did they know why it happened? Yes, they believed it was because of Angui's laziness and disrespect.

From that day, the villagers called it Bukit Batu Hapu. Did they forget Angui's story? No, they did not. They told the story to their children to teach them about hard work and respect. Did the village remain near the stone hill? Yes, it did. The legend of Bukit Batu Hapu became a reminder for everyone.
