In many countries, the (develop) of tourism has been the cause of wide-spread It is a fact that the organization of tours to remote areas and communities has/ have been of (increase) popularity. I amthat the demerits of this..... any possible merits, and I will putmy arguments in the upcoming paragraphs.

On/ In the one hand, there are several benefits associating/ associated with developing tourism in such areas. A benefit of thisin its role in boosting local economy. That is (main) because this development can result in the (introduce) of such services as (accommodate), food and drink, or transportation, created/ creating thousands of jobs and bringing a lucrative source of income for local people and authority. The local communities can enjoy a higher living standard, as a

On/ In the other hand, promoting tourism in these areas is not without any Firstly, there is a convinced/ convincing argument that this (avoid) has a detrimental impact on the local environment. For instance, many tourist (attract) in Vietnam have been contaminating/ contaminated since tourists to such places dispose of rubbish (responsible). Moreover,of this view point out that such tours can put the local culture and tradition in/ at danger. In, tourists from other regions or countries may introduce new culture to the local communities, which can conflict with the local ones, eventually posed/ posing a threat to the (culture) identity of the visited places.

In conclusion, it is obvious that many countries are now exploiting distant areas with their appeal of local identity as a driver for tourism. I firmlythat the negative aspects of this outstrip any positive ones, so it is (advise) that governments should put them into before introduced/ introducing any policies.
