In today's society, gender equality is an important issue that affects all aspects of life, including education. (1) _____ I believe that all students should have equal educational opportunities, I do not agree that universities should accept an equal number of male and female students in every subject.

(2) _____, it is impractical to have an equal number of male and female students in every subject. Different courses have different levels of appeal to different genders, leading to uneven distribution of applicants. (3) _____, nursing and teaching courses tend to attract more female students, while engineering and technology courses attract more male students. (4) _____, having an equal number of male and female students would require enforcing gender quotas, which would not be practical and may lead to undeserving candidates being admitted to courses they are not interested in or qualified for.

(5) _____, admission to university should be based on merit, rather than gender. Selecting candidates based on their qualifications and abilities ensures that the most deserving students are given the opportunity to pursue their chosen course. It would be unfair to give preference to a particular gender and reject a more qualified candidate just (6) _____ their gender.

(7) _____, having an equal number of male and female students does not necessarily lead to gender equality. True gender equality is achieved when both genders have an equal chance to pursue their interests and succeed in their chosen fields. Encouraging more females to pursue traditional male-dominated courses and vice versa is more effective in achieving gender balance than enforcing gender quotas.

(8) _____, universities should not be required to accept equal numbers of male and female students in every subject. Instead, admission should be based on merit, and efforts should be made to encourage more students, regardless of their gender, to pursue their interests in all fields.
