SPORTS AROUND THE WORLD

If you're feeling bored with football, basketball and tennis, why not check out something different?

- A. Yukigassen would be a good sport to try out during a skiing holiday, and not just in Japan, where it originates. Best of all, the only equipment you need is completely free. The sport's name translates as 'snow battle' and that's what it is. Two teams of seven people each make a total of ninety snowballs, although both the team size and number of snowballs is completely flexible when playing this yourself. Simply throw the snowballs at the other team and, if you hit someone, they are out. Either get all your opponents out or, when all the snowballs have gone, see who has the most players left.
- B. It is no surprise that the sport of picigin was invented in a Mediterranean country, Croatia. To play, just get a small, light, rubber ball and stand in a circle with your friends in the sea. Using your hand as a bat, you hit the ball to each other, trying to keep it from falling into the sea and everyone works together rather than in opposition. You don't score points, it's just a fun way of passing the time. It is recommended to play with five people, but it's up to you. The best thing is that even if you leap to try to reach the ball and fail, you at least have a chance to cool down in the water for a few seconds.
- C. The Netherlands are famous for their picturesque canals, but having so much water can cause problems, especially if there are no bridges nearby. Before fierljeppen became a spectator sport, it was simply a method of overcoming this problem. Competitors use a pole, similar to those used in the Olympic sport of pole vaulting, and attempt to cross one of the canals without getting wet, landing on a sandy area on the other side of the water. The winner is the athlete who travels the furthest, and the current record is a distance of over twenty-two metres.
- D. Finally, we have fives, for which you need a court that has walls on three or four sides. The players wear a special glove which acts as a racket and hit the ball against the walls. Some people assume it must have been invented at the exclusive public school, Eton, but Eton fives is just one of several versions of the sport. The sport is fast and very competitive with the players having to hit the ball above a line painted on the walls. The ball is allowed to bounce on the ground but only once. The reason for the game's name is unclear as it is played by either two or four people, but it could refer to the points system originally used.

The package holiday can be said to date back to 1855 when Thomas Cook organised a tour of Belgium, Germany and France. 5.1. _____ This covered the USA, India, China, Japan, Singapore and, finally, Egypt and lasted an astonishing 222 days.

It wasn't until the 1950s that foreign holidays started to become possible for anyone other than the rich and by the 1990s, package deals accounted for over fifty percent of all holidays taken by British tourists. There were many reasons for their popularity, not least that, before the age of the Internet, it was almost impossible to book accommodation and travel without expert help. Package holidays also removed the language barrier. 5.2. _____ Not only was accommodation with full-board provided but so were transfers between the airport and hotel as well as optional excursions to places of interest.

By the early 2000s though, although the numbers of people going on package holidays had risen, their share of the holiday market had fallen. 5.3. _____ For example, budget airlines could take passengers all over Europe at minimal expense and, with the click of a mouse, tourists could rent a car, book accommodation and find places of interest. Why pay someone to do it for you when it was so easy? In addition, there was a growing feeling that resorts which had grown up to cater for the mass-tourism market had become concrete jungles full of English style restaurants and bars for people whose idea of a holiday was all the comforts of home but with more sun.

It might be surprising to learn, therefore, that package holidays are making a comeback, especially since the Covid pandemic. 5.4. _____ In contrast, if anything prevents a package tour run by a reputable company from taking place, the customer is legally protected. They may not have a holiday, but at least they will get their money back. The service has also improved. 5.5. _____ These are experts who work with customers, using their knowledge and experience to suggest the perfect choices for each person's individual preferences.

Package tours are not for everyone but, for those whose aim is not an adventure but a chance to escape from the pressures of life for a couple of weeks, they could well be the perfect solution. And perhaps, their renewed success is due to the fact that more and more of us have that need nowadays.

- A. A lot of people struggled to get refunds for cancelled holidays at that time.
- B. The reason was that the independent holiday market was expanding much more quickly, as it had become possible to research and book everything without help.
- C. He soon came up with a much more adventurous itinerary.
- D. Nowadays, as well as traditional travel agents, there are a growing number of personal travel assistants.
- E. Despite these disadvantages, there were still many reasons why customers preferred a package tour.
- F. From leaving the airport in Britain until their return, tourists were looked after by English-speaking guides.

THE DREAM HOUSE

It was June and Sally and her husband Aaron had just signed the contract to buy their first home. All the searching and decision making of the previous eight months had finally paid off. They had looked round bungalows in the suburbs, renovated Victorian terraced houses in up-and-coming neighbourhoods and town-centre apartments. They'd rejected wonderful houses of all sizes that they would never be able to afford and cheap, run-down properties that they didn't have the time or energy to make habitable. They'd found the perfect house at a reasonable price on more than one occasion, only to reject it for being just a little too far out of town or slightly too close to a main road.

In the end, they chose a terraced house on a new estate which, judging by the prams in driveways and chalk on the pavement, was home to a lot of young couples like themselves. Sally started imagining a future in which she too would watch over children happily playing with their new neighbours, even grandchildren when her imagination ran away with her.

On the day of the move, with the sun shining and the removals men arriving on time, the signs were optimistic. Even better, the removals men managed not to drop any of the many boxes of possessions and a few of their new neighbours popped by to introduce themselves and welcome the happy couple. One even brought a delicious cake. All of this perhaps prevented them from noticing details which, if they had not been distracted, they would quickly have been aware of. It wasn't long, though, before they became apparent.

Exhausted after the long day, they went to bed only to be woken by a fierce storm and the rattling of windows and slamming of doors. Sally's first thought was that they had left a window open, but it turned out that, even though everything was shut, there were large enough gaps between the window frames and the walls for the wind to get in. They gave up trying to sleep and went downstairs to put the kettle on for a cup of tea, where they discovered that there had been a power cut.

On the following Monday at 9 a.m. exactly, they called the builders, Aaron leaving the task to his wife, who was far more assertive than him. She demanded to speak to the owner of the company. 'I can't understand it' he said. 'Feedback from residents of other houses we have completed has always been very positive.' This didn't make Sally feel any better and her mood didn't improve when, later that day, some of their neighbours told her that they had also suffered problems with their homes and had made their displeasure very clear to the owner and his employees.

The following three months were spent, during the working week at least, sharing their home with builders attempting to correct their mistakes. It was a slow process and more than once Sally, close to tears, said to friends and family members: 'We have bought our dream house. Unfortunately, the dream is a nightmare'.

THE STRESS OF MOVING

It is often said that moving house is one of the most stressful events in a person's life but why is that? Well, there are several reasons.

First of all, it is almost certainly the biggest financial decision a person will ever make. It is not just the cost of the actual property but all the other fees as well, from solicitors and surveyors to estate agents and, of course, once the home has been bought, many people feel that they would also like to replace their old furniture at the same time. So, with all the other worries associated with the move, there is this additional stress of not only using up their life's savings but perhaps also taking out a mortgage which will take twenty-five years to pay off.

Secondly, moving takes up a lot of time, starting with the search for the perfect property, followed by the legal paperwork and finally the redecoration and renovation needed to turn 'a' home into 'your' home. There is also the matter of packing. As well as furniture, kitchen equipment, books and other bits and pieces, there could still be an attic full of old photos, children's school books and electronic equipment that has to be sorted out. And once it has all been thrown away or packed up, there is the additional worry that the removal van may get lost or the box containing all the best china and glass is dropped with everything inside destroyed.

Another cause of stress is facing the unknown. It is one thing to imagine living in a new home, but it is something entirely different to actually do it. First there is the sadness of leaving a place filled with fond memories. Then there is the necessity not only to get to know new people but, if the move is to a new town, to register with doctors and dentists, not to mention finding a hairdresser and other reliable services.

The whole process is physically and mentally exhausting and can lead to a neglect of work and a once healthy lifestyle, such as exercise, is forgotten while home-cooked meals are replaced by more convenient takeaways. Sleep may also suffer from both lack of time and a mind full of worries and doubts.

So, yes, moving house is stressful and there is little that can be done to prevent it. The best thing is to be prepared and organised so that the disruption to your life is kept to a minimum.
