Tea and cakes

There are four Royal garden parties every year – one in Scotland and three at Buckingham Palace in London. About 8,000 people go to each party. The government and many different charities all help to choose the guests.

The party starts at three o'clock in the afternoon. The guests listen to music (there are two bands) and walk around the beautiful gardens. They drink tea or coffee and eat sandwiches and cakes. They can't take photos or use mobile phones.

At four o'clock, the Queen and her husband, the Duke of Edinburgh, join the party. Other members of the Royal Family – like Prince Charles, Prince William and Princess Anne – don't go to every garden party, but they go to one or two a year. It's a chance for the Royal Family to meet and talk to the public. The party finishes at six o'clock.
