

There is a strong connection between the _____ that people pass on through word of mouth, from generation to generation, and from one _____ to the next, and the objects that inspire these stories.

TV host and researcher Julia Bradbury is on her way to Manchester to...find out _____ such an object.

I love this story because it's current, it's actually happening now. Apparently there is ancient Egyptian relic that is turning of its _____ accord a museum in Manchester, which is where I'm heading.

Nobody knows why it's happening, it's a bit of a _____. It may seem unbelievable, but at the museum they have the footage to prove it.

Julia is on her way to talk to Egyptologist Camble Price and check it out.

When they realized the _____ was moving, they set up a time-lapse camera.

Look at that! that clear as day.

The statue is indeed turning, while the others _____ still.

Let's get back to the actual little statue itself.

Um, what, what does it stand for, where, where is it _____, what's its history?

So, it belonged to a man called Neb U, and he lived about 4,000 years ago.

There is a hieroglyphic inscription its _____, asking for offerings for his spirit in the afterlife.

Ancient Egyptians _____ that statues could be alternative homes for the spirit.

Okay, I've seen the footage, I've discussed things with you, now show me the mummy.

Okay, the story of the revolving _____ in its solid glass case was all over the news and social _____.

Some suggested it might be the spirit of singer and _____ Michael Jackson, while others blamed it on Nebu himself, turning the statue around to get people's attention.

Julia has arranged a _____ with.

Tiltly to find out why ancient Egypt is such powerful source of inspiration.

I think we're almost pre-programmed to believe _____ things about Ancient Egypt.

People have seen films, they've read about Tutankhamun, and when you read about Tutankhamun, it's very _____ to break away from the idea that there's a curse there.

According to legend, anyone who dared go _____ near the Boy King's final resting place soon fell victim to the curse.

In the 1920s, the legend gained traction because some of the _____ who were involved in finding the tomb died not long after it was broken open, the press attributed their deaths to the curse, and then we're brought back to our _____ rotating man, and all of these ingredients just pulled together, didn't they, and created this big story out of a out of a tiny object.

Absolutely, yes.

There did turn out to be rational explanation as to _____ the statue was spinning.

The outside vibrations created by footfall and even buses going _____ the museum.

Together with the slightly convex base of this particular statue caused it to slowly turn _____.

Sound expert Stephen Gosling has measured the vibrations and is 100% sure.

Is this conclusive? Yes, you stake your _____ on it.

Yes, can't ask for more than that, Steve.

A rather unexciting ending to this particular _____, but ancient Egyptians left us many reminders of their civilization with stories behind them.

We can only imagine, we're steeped in Egyptian _____, and that's one of the reasons why this story gathered such momentum around the world, so next time you're out and _____, keep your eyes peeled for sphinxes, pyramids, obolisks, they're everywhere apparently.