

Valentine's Day is a special time of the year when people celebrate love and friendship. Though it is celebrated in many countries, each place has its own unique customs and traditions.

In the United Kingdom, Valentine's Day is quite popular. People often give cards, known as "Valentines," to their loved ones. These cards can be romantic, funny, or even anonymous—creating a bit of mystery. Chocolates and flowers, especially red roses, are common gifts. Restaurants are often fully booked as people go out for a romantic meal with their partners.

In Japan, Valentine's Day has an interesting twist. On 14th February, it is usual for women to give chocolates to men. There are two types: "Giri-choco" which means "obligatory chocolate" for friends and colleagues, and "Honmei-choco" for someone special. Later, on 14th March, known as "White Day," men return the favour, often with gifts that are more expensive or lavish.

Meanwhile, in South Korea, not only do they celebrate Valentine's Day and White Day, but they also have another celebration on 14th April called "Black Day." This day is for single people, where they gather to eat black bean noodles and celebrate their single status.

In Brazil, Valentine's Day is differently scheduled. Known as "Dia dos Namorados," or "Lover's Day," it is celebrated on 12th June. People exchange gifts, such as chocolates and flowers, and there are music festivals and concerts to mark the occasion.

In Finland, Valentine's Day is more about friendship than romantic love. It is called "Ystävänpäivä," which means "Friend's Day." People send cards and gifts to friends as a way to appreciate their companionship.

These diverse traditions show that while Valentine's Day is a global celebration, different countries celebrate it in ways that reflect their unique cultures and attitudes towards love and friendship.

Which Title Fits Best?

1. Romantic Celebrations in Different Countries
2. Love Around the World: Valentine's Day Traditions
3. Chocolate and Friendship: A Global Perspective

Can You Tell which Sentences are True and which are False?

1. Valentine's Day is celebrated in the same way in every country.
2. In the UK, people often send cards to their friends and family.
3. Women in Japan typically give chocolates to men on Valentine's Day.
4. South Korea has a celebration for single people called "White Day."
5. In Brazil, Valentine's Day is celebrated in June.
6. Finland's Valentine's Day focuses more on romantic relationships than friendships.
7. Different countries have their own unique ways of celebrating Valentine's Day.