Then a voice came from the clouds and told the crowd that a life should belong to the person who tries to save it, and not to those who try to take it. This voice belonged to Kuan Yin.

Everybody wanted to buy this huge fish because they thought that whoever ate it would also live forever.

The huge playful fish was caught in a net and was brought to the market where people were admiring this huge fish that was still alive many hours after being taken out of the water.

The crowd realized their selfish ways, and everybody went home, determined to be more loving.

Shan Tsai was then able to buy the fish and take it to Kuan Yin who promptly put it in the sea

Kuan Yin had a dear disciple, a boy called Shan Tsai. Kuan Yin sent him with all the money she had to buy the little fish to save him from being eaten, but Shan Tsai still had not enough because everybody kept offering more and more money for the miraculous fish.
