NATURE IN THE BIG CITY

When we think of huge cities like New York or London, nature is not the first thing that comes to mind. Instead, we imagine streets filled with cars and buses, and a few trees trying to survive in this unfriendly environment. 7.1. ____ But while both these two great parks are welcoming green spaces, they seem too perfect to have much to do with nature.

However, if you make the effort to look for it, you discover that nature in a city area is nothing unusual. For example, I used to think that real nature could be found only outside cities. 7.2. ____ This small green space along the banks of the River Thames had been set up by volunteers, and it featured labelled plants, information maps, and pictures of the riverside birds. Schoolchildren were brought there to discover the bits of nature that still survived in their city, and it was an amazing experience.

While that little piece of nature has since been built over, some larger, more organised projects are being developed in cities. One of the most recent and impressive of these is the Walthamstow Wetlands in North London. 7.3. ____ And because of its size, as you walk along its trails you can forget that the city centre is only a short trip away.

HOME SHARING GROWS UP

Sharing a flat 8.1. _____ something that normally only students and young working people did. When they were established enough in their careers, or as soon as they got into a permanent relationship, people would move to their own flat or even buy their own house. However, recent changes in the housing market have made this kind of move 8.2. _____ challenging than it was in the past. Increasingly, young people see sharing as a permanent solution, and even some middle-aged and elderly people are opting for the shared life. Cost, of course, is the main reason for 8.3. _____ a flatmate. Rents and purchase prices for properties seem to be on an endless upward track, while salaries have not increased by nearly as much. You are more likely to find a place to live near the centre 8.4. _____ you're only paying part of the cost. Security and convenience also play a part in making this decision, and older people find living with 8.5. _____ person a practical and comforting option.
