

World's Loneliest Frog Gets Valentine's Date

Romeo, an endangered, orange-bellied water frog living at a in Bolivia, has a chance for love this Valentine's Day. A year ago, his caretakers, who were he might be the last of his species, posted a profile for the frog. This helped inspire conservationists to go on an expedition in search of more frogs of this . Five frogs were found, and scientists think they may have found a potential mate. If all goes as planned, "Juliet" will be to Romeo on Valentine's Day with the goal of trying to preserve this Bolivian species.
