William's dad loses his new car

One evening after work, William's dad was going home in his old blue and white car when suddenly it stopped. He couldn't start it again. There was a lot of traffic behind him on the road. A policeman came and, together, they pushed the car off the road. 'That's enough!' William's dad thought. 'I must have a new car. I'm going to buy the silver one that I saw yesterday.'

So on Saturday, he bought a new car. William and his dad wanted to try it so they drove into the town. After half an hour, they decided to stop because they were hungry. They found a place for the car in a small, quiet street and left it there.

They had a snack in a café and then they decided to drive home again. Outside in the street, William's dad said, 'Where's the car? Which road is it in?'

'I don't know!' said William.

They spent fifteen minutes looking for it. Then they found a policeman and said, 'We can't find our car!'

The policeman looked at them and said, 'I'll help you find the car, but is it a blue and white one?'

'No,' said William's dad.

'Good!' said the policeman, 'because I remember you and your old car!'

They looked in all the roads near the café and soon found the new silver one!

David's busy morning

It was Saturday morning and David's mother had lots of work to do. David's baby sister, Katy, was only two and a half, and David's father, who was a fireman, always worked at the fire station until midnight. David was fourteen. He liked reading books about animals, reading magazines about computers and watching football on the television. At 11 o'clock, he was lying on the sofa in the living room when his mother came in.

'I want to get some medicine from the chemist's and some fruit and vegetables from the supermarket. Katy is sleeping so I can't take her with me. You can stay here with her, or go to the shops for me. Which job do you want to do?' It was a hot day and David didn't want to go out. 'I'll stay with Katy,' he said. 'That will be easier.'

David's mother left, but Katy only slept for five more minutes, and then she woke up. 'David play with Katy!' she shouted. David gave her some toys, then read her a story. Then he found some paints for her and she painted a picture. After that, he had to tidy Katy's room. When his mother came home, he said, 'I've been very busy and I'm very tired now! I chose the wrong job, Mum!!'

The school rabbits

My name's Richard and I'm 11. At school, our class had a pet rabbit called Harry. His fur was brown and white. Every day I cleaned Harry's cage and gave him water. We brought him carrots, which were his favourite food. Sometimes we took Harry's box outside into the playground. We took him out of his cage and then he could smell clean air and hop on the grass.

One day when we took Harry outside we left him there because it was sunny. But when we came out after the lessons, we couldn't find Harry anywhere. We were very sad.

'Perhaps he went to the park to live with the other rabbits,' said our teacher.

The next day, she brought another rabbit to school. This one was black and we decided to call him Jim.

Jim was a fat rabbit and he ate all the food we brought him. When we took him out of his cage, he just lay down. He did not hop or jump at all. Then, one morning, I saw six baby rabbits inside the cage! I ran to tell our teacher. Then all the children in the class went to look at the babies. We were all very surprised!

'Well!' said our teacher. 'We'll have to call our new rabbit Jane now!'
