Should children be allowed to use social media sites?

Đọc và gạch chân các lập luận hỗ trợ trong đoạn 2 và đoạn 3.

Most young people enjoy going on social media sites such as Facebook, Instagram, and Twitter. Using these websites can provide many benefits. But some parents think that children should not be allowed on social media sites.

Children Can Use Social Media Sites

To start, social media sites help children make friends. They can make new friends easily. One expert says making friends on social media sites is good for young people. They can know that they are part of a group. This helps them increase their self-esteem. Next, social media sites allow children to share their ideas. For instance, many children like to share their stories and artwork on Tumblr. Their friends leave comments and encourage them to make more pieces. This helps children enhance their creativity.

Children Should Not Use Social Media Sites

First, kids can become addicted to social media sites. They want to read all their friends' new posts. Even adults find it hard to stop using social media sites because there are always new and interesting things to see. In fact, children in the U.S. spend between six and nine hours a day on these sites. This is a waste of time. They should study and play outside. Another problem with social media sites is bullying. Some mean messages can hurt kids' feelings. Cyber bullying can lead to serious mental health problems.
