Viet Nam's New Year, called Tet, is the biggest and most important holiday in the country. It usually takes place between January twenty-first and February nineteenth, depending on the lunar calendar, so the exact date changes every year. Tet celebrations often last around ten days, with the first three days being the most special and meaningful. Many Vietnamese people believe that whatever happens during these days will affect the rest of the year, so they try to avoid arguments, speak kindly, and smile a lot. There is also a belief that the first visitor to enter the house on New Year's Day can bring good or bad luck. Children look forward to receiving red envelopes with lucky money, similar to traditions in other Asian countries.
