Video games are one of the most popular things to do for fun around the world, but studies that look into their effects on players, both good and bad, are often seen as unimportant.

One creative way (18)_____ health care is to help people deal with pain. Because of how much focus is needed to play such a game, (19)_____ of the pain. This has been reported and tested with pediatric patients. Many different types of people use video games as a form of physical or occupational therapy. These kinds of games take the focus off of possible pain, and unlike more traditional therapeutic activities, they don't require the person (20_____ that can be painful.

Long-term follow-up and strong randomized controlled trials of these kinds of interventions have not been done, though. It's also not clear if patients get tired of these games over time. Also, because there haven't been any controlled trials comparing video games to other distractions, it's not clear if the effect of games on distractions depends (21)_____ or if the content of games is also important. More research needs to be done to look at things like how new a game is, what users like, and how challenging it is compared to (22)_____.

For the most part, there isn't much evidence that moderate play has serious acute negative effects. This is because playing video games is very common among kids and teens in industrialized countries. When bad effects do happen, they are usually pretty minor and only last for a short time. They go away (23)_____ when you play less often. There needs to be more research on too much play and a clearer definition of what too much play is. It would also be good to look at how video game addiction changes over time.

Wolves were the original ancestors of dogs. You might mistake a wolf for a dog, but they're much larger. On top of that, they're pretty scary. Some wolves evolved into different species at some point. The smaller and kinder ones were among them. The first dogs were these kinder wolves. When or why this occurred is a mystery. It may have occurred organically more than 50,000 years ago, according to some. Still others place the human handiwork of 15,000 to 50,000 years ago.

Regardless of their origin, the practicality of dogs was immediately recognized. Human geneticists and paleontologists agree that dogs and humans first crossed paths in the Middle East some 13,000 years ago. It wasn't long before dogs made their way to North America from Asia, Africa, and Europe. Hunting and traveling were likely the primary uses of these dogs. In addition, They were also good companions. The ancient Egyptians valued dogs highly. Not only did the Egyptians rely on dogs for hunting, but they also used them as guards and fighters. To them, a dog represented the deity responsible for protecting hell. Dogs were also given names by the ancient Egyptians. Names like "Brave One," "Reliable," "North-wind," "Blacky," and "Useless" were common.The ancient Romans also used dogs as a weapon. Dogs were utilized by the Roman army across Europe. The dogs served as messengers at times and as attack dogs at others.

These days, you can find dogs of all shapes and sizes. What gives them their wolf heritage? Various theories have been put forward. Canidae is a family of dogs, but some scientists think that dogs actually have ancestry from other animals. The jackals, coyotes, and foxes fall into this category. The majority of scientists also think that the variation was shaped by natural selection and evolution. In subsequent epochs, dog breeders sought out dogs that people liked and crossed them to create new varieties. This is how people are still facilitating the emergence of new breeds in the modern era!

Most of the time, the Hawaiian Islands make us think of a busy tourist spot with white sand beaches and palm trees. On one of the farthest northern islands, though, there aren't any guests or vacation activities. Niihau Island has a volcano that is no longer active, a fragile swamp, and lush woods. There are also many rare animals that live there, like the Hawaiian monk seal. The Robinson family bought the island from the King of Hawaii in 1864 with the promise that they would protect the original Hawaiian culture and language by living there. To keep this promise, the family started to curb the number of people who could visit the island over time. Today, you can only talk to the original Niihauans on the island if they invite you. Because of this, the locals didn't know much about the rest of the world until lately.

The main town of the island looks like it has been frozen in time when you walk through it. There aren't any cars, stores, bars, or cops. Horses and bicycles are the only ways to get around. There is no electricity, running water, or phone lines. The 130 people who live there permanently are all native Hawaiians and speak Hawaiian as their first language. They fish and farm for a living and don't pay rent. People who live on the other Hawaiian islands have very different ways of life.

The kids in Niihau don't have TVs or electronics like other kids, but they go to a small school that gets all of its power from the sun. The school is one of only a few in the US that gets all of its power from the sun. Hawaiian traditions and ideals about living off the land and ocean are taught at the school. At the same time, the kids can learn how to use computers and meet with people from other places.

People from other places can connect with Niihau by buying the islanders' items, like jewelry made from shells. In other places, you can buy these things. Few people are able to visit this banned land, but tourists are still interested in its secrets.

Question 34: What is the best title of the text?

A. A Tourist Attraction B. The Niihauans' Lifestyle

C. A Forbidden Island D. Education on Hawaii Islands

Question 35: The word "it" in paragraph 2 refers to_____.

Read the following passage and mark the letter A, B, C or D on your answer sheet to indicate the correct option that best fits each of the numbered blanks from 29 to 33.

A food reviewer is a paid writer who writes about the food they try. People who do this job may also be known as food writers or restaurant reviewers. Food reviewers usually write about what they eat after going to different places and ordering different kinds of food. Some people write about food for websites, blogs, newspapers, and magazines. But not all jobs in this field pay well, or at all. Food writers who are just starting out might send in reviews for free at first just to get their name on the paper and show that they have written something. Some people become food reviewers by writing about the food they eat and where they eat on social media.

They can try new foods anywhere in the world. A few of these experts have their own TV shows. People who know a lot about food can also write books about it. There aren't many paid openings for this highly sought-after job. People who want this job will have to work hard and spend a lot of time on it.

Here are the levels of pay for each job:

●$36 an hour for a journalist

$41,869 a year for a reporter

Writing staff: $38,716 a year

LIVEWORKSHEETS

Content writers make $17.54 an hour.

Pay ranges from $7.25 to $74.45 an hour.

Food writing is a pretty small area, so not much is known about how much food writers make. News reporters, staff writers, and content writers, whose jobs are a lot like food reviews, can find information here. A lot of people who review food don't always write about it. They look at places for a living and write about other things when they're not rating restaurants.

Read the following passage and mark the letter A, B, C or D on your answer sheet to indicate the correct option that best fits each of the numbered blanks from 34 to 40

A baby born today will live for how long? 100 years? 120 years? Genes that could make us all live longer are being studied by scientists.

100 years old is already an important milestone for a huge number of people. They are called "wellderly" because there are so many healthy older people. Not having a big sickness like high blood pressure, heart disease, or diabetes makes this group of people over 80 years old.

In places where good old age is common, there are a lot of research studies. The island of Okinawa in Japan and Calabria in the south of Italy are two examples. About 2,000 people are living in the small village of Molochio in Calabria. Plus, at least eight of them are over 100 years old. "I eat a lot of fruit and vegetables" is the answer that experts always get from people like this when they are asked how they stay so healthy and young. "Something from every food group." "I don't drink or smoke."

LIVEWORKSHEETS

Today, experts are also looking at genes to try to figure out why some people live so long. In the past, they only looked at things like food and lifestyle. Eric Topol, a researcher, says that we must have genes that keep us from getting old. People who share a DNA link were looked at in the new study on living a long time. Living in Ecuador is a cool group. There are several people in one part of the country who all have the same genetic situation. Laron disease is the name for it. Not very tall—just over a meter—these guys get. They are also less likely to get cancer and diabetes because they have Laron syndrome. Their family members live shorter lives because of this. Additionally, there is a group of long-living Japanese-American guys on the Hawaiian island of Oahu. In the Laron syndrome group, they share a gene.

The family trees of the 100-year-old people were made by researchers back in Calabria. Family records from the 1800s to the present day were looked at. To sum up, DNA factors that are good for men's health have been found. Most of the time, women in Europe live longer than men, so this finding is strange. Why do some people live longer? Probably a third factor—luck—comes into play along with genes and the surroundings.

Question 34: Which of the following is the best title for the passage?

A. The Secrets of A Long And Healthy Life
