New Year's resolutions have a long history. The Babylonians promised to return

(0) _____ (borrow) objects and repay their debts at the (1) _____ (begin) of each year, while the Romans started January by making a vow to the god Janus (from whom the month takes its name). That means we've had centuries of (2) _____ (break) promises.

"I think the main reason why new year's resolutions fail is that people are rather (3) _____ (realistic)," says Benjamin Gardner, an expert in behaviour change at King's College London. "If you're not doing any exercise and set (4) _____ (you) the goal of going to the gym five times a week for half an hour, you're probably not going to achieve it. The other reason is that people are not (5) _____ (necessary) ready to change."

Psychologists at the College recently proposed that, for something positive to happen, people must have the capability, opportunity and (6) _____ (motivate) to make it happen. "Often people aren't making resolutions for the right reasons," says Gardner: "They think that because it's New Year, they're (7) _____ (expect) to say they'll change their behaviour. But once they (8) _____ (real) the difficulty of what they're doing, they give up because they aren't motivated enough in the first place."
