The Colors of Our Feelings

Every day after school, Maya liked to sit by the big window in her room and draw. She believed that art was the best way to show how she felt. If she was happy, she used bright yellows and oranges. When she felt calm, she chose cool blues and greens. But when she was upset, she filled her paper with dark purples and stormy grays.

One afternoon, Maya's little brother, Liam, accidentally stepped on her painting. A dark footprint covered the sun she had drawn. Maya felt angry and her eyes filled with tears. Instead of shouting, she took a deep breath and picked up a new page. She painted a stormy sky with heavy clouds. As she painted, her feelings slowly changed. The clouds in her picture became lighter and softer.

When she finished, Maya showed her painting to Liam. "This is how I felt when you stepped on my picture," she said gently. Liam looked worried. "I'm really sorry, Maya," he whispered. Maya smiled and drew a tiny sun peeking through the clouds. "It's okay. I'm feeling better now."

Maya realized that expressing herself through art helped her understand her feelings—and share them with others.
