Read the following factual recount story:

The 2004 Indian Ocean Tsunami and Its Impact on Sumatra"

On December 26, 2004, a massive undersea earthquake struck off the west coast of Sumatra, Indonesia. The earthquake triggered a powerful tsunami that affected many coastal areas. In Aceh Province, high waves destroyed villages, buildings, and forests near the shore. More than 160,000 people lost their lives in Indonesia, making it one of the deadliest natural disasters in history.

After the tsunami, thousands of volunteers, governments, and international organizations came to help. They provided medical support, food, and shelter. Environmental teams also worked to restore damaged mangrove forests to protect the coastline from future waves. By 2014, many coastal areas in Aceh had been rebuilt, and a tsunami museum was established to educate people about disaster preparedness.
