The Great Pretender

Read the text and choose the correct answers.

Frank Abagnale Jr. is a name that has become synonymous with deception and imposture. The man behind the legendary con artist character portrayed by Leonardo DiCaprio in the hit film "Catch Me If You Can," Abagnale pulled off some of the most audacious and elaborate scams of the 20th century, using a variety of aliases and tricks to stay one step ahead of the law.

Abagnale's father was an embezzler. Although his parents divorced when he was a pre-teen, he managed to learn a lot from his dad. Frank's 'career' began in the early 1960s, when he was just a teenager. Using nothing more than a few forged documents and his knack for deception, he managed to pass himself off as a Pan Am pilot, a doctor, and a lawyer. He used a variety of identities such as Frank Williams, Robert Conrad, Frank Adams, and Robert Monjo. Frank Williams was one of his most successful identities, which he used to pass himself off as a Pan Am pilot and to travel around the world for free. What will surprise many people is that he never actually flew a plane. Despite gaining access to airline facilities, and even working as a substitute pilot, Abagnale always managed to avoid taking off and landing a plane. Robert Conrad was another identity that he used to impersonate a doctor and a lawyer, Frank Adams was an alias he used to cash fake checks and Robert Monjo was one of Abagnale's most complex identities. He had to master French and to have a good understanding of French culture, which he used to pass himself off as a French teacher and a university professor. English__on_the_go Frank Abagnale crisscrossed the country, living a lavish lifestyle and defrauding people out of thousands of dollars. He was able to forge checks so well that many banks accepted them without question. He managed to cash more than $2.5 million during his criminal career. But Abagnale's greatest trick was perhaps his ability to evade capture. Despite being on the FBI's most wanted list, he managed to evade authorities for years, using a variety of aliases and tricks to stay one step ahead of the law. He would frequently change his appearance, using makeup and false identities, and would often use wigs, glasses, and fake mustaches to change his look. He was also known to use different accents and mannerisms to throw off authorities further.

In the end, it was a stroke of luck that finally brought Abagnale down. In 1968, he was arrested in France and subsequently extradited to the United States to face charges. It is worth mentioning that his capture wasn't the result of a long investigation or a well-crafted trap but more of a chance event. A French police officer recognized him in a hotel, and he was arrested while trying to use his usual fake Pan Am pilot ID, this was a fortunate coincidence that led to his capture.

He served just over five years in prison before being released on the condition that he assist the FBI in their efforts to combat white-collar crime. After serving his sentence, Frank Abagnale Jr. became a reformed man and began using his knowledge and experiences to educate others about the dangers of identity theft and fraud. He became a highly sought-after speaker, giving lectures and presentations on the topic to various organizations and agencies, including the FBI and other law enforcement agencies.
