COMPUTERS

Who invented computers?

In 1833, a British inventor, Charles Babbage made plans for a mathematical machine. It was the beginning of the first computer. He spent 37 years trying to build his machine, but there were many complications and he died before he finished it. The first computer was finally created in 1946. It was huge. It filled a large room and weighed over 30,000 kilos. Luckily, computers are smaller nowadays. Today you can even buy a computer that is the size of a small mobile phone.

Why is a mouse called a mouse?

The first computer mouse was invented by Douglas Engelbart in around 1964. It was a little wooden box on wheels that could move an on-screen cursor. It was called a mouse because the wire that connected it to the computer looked like the tail of a mouse. Luckily, a computer mouse is much smaller now and is usually made of plastic. However, it still looks like the first mouse that was made.

When did the World Wide Web begin?

The World Wide Web was invented by Tim Berners-Lee in 1990. It was immediately successful and in four years, 50 million people were using it! Today, billions of email messages are sent across the world every day. It is difficult to imagine life without it! Computers became much more important in the world than anyone ever expected!

Task A: Circle T for True and F for False.
