Read the following passage about Urbanisation and Modern Cities and mark the letter A, B, C or D on your answer sheet to indicate the best answer to each of the following questions from 23 to 30.

In recent decades, urbanisation has become a defining feature of modern society. As more people move from rural areas to cities, urban centres continue to expand rapidly. Urbanisation refers to the process by which populations shift from countryside living to city life, leading to significant changes in economic activities, social structures, and the environment.

One of the main drivers of urbanisation is the search for better employment opportunities. Cities often offer a wider range of jobs, higher incomes, and improved access to education and healthcare. As a result, many young people are attracted to urban areas in hopes of improving their quality of life.

However, rapid urban growth also presents serious challenges. Overcrowding, traffic congestion, and air pollution have become common problems in many large cities. These issues can negatively affect public health and reduce living standards if not properly managed.

To address these challenges, many governments are investing in sustainable urban planning. This includes developing efficient public transportation systems, promoting green spaces, and encouraging the construction of environmentally friendly buildings. Such measures aim to balance economic growth with environmental protection.

Urbanisation also influences social relationships. While city life can offer greater cultural diversity and social interaction, it may also lead to feelings of isolation due to busy lifestyles. Therefore, creating inclusive communities has become an important goal for urban planners.

In conclusion, urbanisation brings both opportunities and challenges. When managed effectively, it can contribute to economic development and improved living conditions. However, without careful planning, it may result in long-term social and environmental problems.

Read the following passage about The Changing World of Work and mark the letter A, B, C or D on your answer sheet to indicate the best answer to each of the following questions from 31 to 40.

[I] The world of work has undergone significant changes in recent decades. [II] Advances in technology, globalization, and evolving social expectations have reshaped how people view employment. [III] Traditional career paths are becoming less common, while flexible and remote working arrangements are increasingly popular. [IV] As a result, workers are required to adapt continuously in order to remain relevant in the job market.

One major factor influencing the modern workplace is technological innovation. Automation and artificial intelligence have replaced many repetitive tasks, especially in manufacturing and data processing. While this has improved efficiency, it has also raised concerns about job security for workers whose skills are no longer in demand. Consequently, lifelong learning has become essential.

Another noticeable change is the growing emphasis on work-life balance. Many employees now value flexible schedules and meaningful work more than long-term job stability. Remote work, in particular, allows individuals to manage personal responsibilities more effectively, although it can sometimes lead to isolation or blurred boundaries between work and home life.

In response to these changes, companies are adjusting their management strategies.

Employers are investing more in employee well-being, professional development, and inclusive workplace cultures. Organizations that fail to adapt may struggle to attract and retain skilled workers.

In conclusion, the modern world of work is dynamic and constantly evolving. Success in this environment depends on adaptability, continuous skill development, and a willingness to embrace change from both employees and employers.
