Survey Finds The Happiest Places

What is the happiest place on earth? It's Denmark. A leading researcher has analyzed the results of years of surveys about happiness. The surveys asked thousands of people in more than 20 nations, "How happy are you?" Here are some conclusions. Climate has little effect on happiness. People in warm Mediterranean countries, such as Portugal and Greece, often said they were unhappy. More people in Northern European countries- Denmark, the Netherlands, and Norway- said they were happy, even though their weather is probably the worst in Europe. It's cloudy in the summer and cold and dark in the winter.

Americans shouldn't move to the east or West Coast to look for the good life. People in New York and California were not happier than people in other regions. In fact, the happiest parts of the United States are areas that are rural and poorer than other areas.

Psychologist Michael Hagerty says this is because people in rural areas tend to stay in the place where they grew up, near family and friends. People who have close ties to friends and family are usually happier than those who do not.

The conclusion? You don't need to move to Denmark to be happy. Hagerty says, "The best thing you can do to be happy is to develop good ties with friends and family. You can do that wherever you are, right now."

31. How many people took part in the survey on happiness?
32. What has little effect on happiness?
33. What's the weather like in Denmark in the summer?
34. What are the happiest parts of the United States?
35. According to the research, what should you do with your friends and family if you want to be happy?
