1. Obviously, these young people need help. Their parents have probably done everything they can, but that is not enough. Alcohol awareness campaigns are also all right, and of course those shops which sell alcohol to minors must be punished severely, but something else must be done. Social intervention is necessary.

2. Many people think that drug addiction is one of the most destructive epidemics in human history. In fact, drug addiction has killed more people than many wars or diseases.

3. The supervision of a therapist is also essential. The therapist will hold meetings with the young addict, individually and with his/her family. No need to say that the support from the families is very important. Besides, this young addict will attend group meetings with other young people in the same circumstances.

4. My little brother, who is only fifteen years old, has come home drunk on many occasions, especially at weekends. He says that he started drinking because his friends do it, he also says that he can give up drinking any time he wishes. But before he realises he will become addicted to alcohol. Many parents have to face this horrible problem every day.

5. When we talk about addiction people usually think only of hard drugs, such as heroine or cocaine. But that is a terrible mistake. Many young people smoke and drink alcohol heavily, even preteen (children under the age of thirteen). Unfortunately, like many other families, I have that problem in my own home.
