

The Match in the Village

Next Saturday my friends and I are travelling to my village for a football match. We are meeting at the bus station at 7:10, because the coach leaves at 7:30 (it's a timetable). I'm going to take a small bag, my boots and a jacket. My mum thinks I'm crazy because I'm always a bit impatient, but I really don't want to be late.

Last month our trip was a disaster. There was a huge traffic jam on the motorway, so we arrived late and missed the warm-up. This time we're leaving earlier. I think it will be a good day, but football is sometimes unpredictable.

When we arrive at the station, we'll check the route and the platform number on the screen. If there is an unexpected delay or a cancellation, we'll ask the driver for information. We can pay the fare with a contactless card, which is very convenient. My friend Leo always disagrees with paying by phone, but it's not illegal, and it saves time.

During the trip, at 8:00 we will be passing the old bridge, and by 9:15 we will have reached our destination. By then, our coach will have used less fuel than many cars, so our carbon emissions will be lower. That makes my dad happy.

By 10:00, I will have been travelling for almost three hours, so I'll be hungry. As soon as we get off, we'll buy snacks. After we eat, we'll walk to the pitch. If we win, I'll be the happiest person in the village. If we lose... well, that's unnecessary drama!
