The Girl in the River

It was late, and Tony, a taxi driver, was tired. He had just decided to call it a night and head home when he saw her. She was standing alone by the dark, cold river, shivering violently. She was soaking wet, her dress clinging to her, and her hair dripped onto the pavement.

Tony pulled over. "Are you alright, miss? You're soaked."

The girl turned. Her eyes looked distant, and she spoke in a small, faint voice. "I just... I just fell in. I need a ride home, please."

Tony felt a wave of sympathy. "Get in. Where to?"

As they drove, the girl was silent, staring straight ahead. Tony tried to make conversation, but she only offered brief, almost mechanical replies. When they reached the address she gave, she hesitated.

"I don't have any money," she whispered. "My purse... it went into the river."

"Don't worry about it," Tony said kindly. "Just get inside and get warm."

As she stepped out of the cab, she left two things behind: a faint smell of river mud and a pair of small, wet leather shoes on the backseat floor. Tony shrugged and started to drive away, but then felt a pang of guilt. I should return those shoes. She needs them.

He drove back to the house, parked, and walked to the front door. He knocked, and a moment later, an elderly woman opened it. She looked sad and tired.

"Excuse me, ma'am," Tony said, holding out the wet shoes. "I just dropped your daughter off. She left these in my taxi."

The woman's eyes fixed on the shoes, and her face went pale. She looked back at Tony, tears welling up.

"Sir," she whispered, taking the shoes carefully. "My daughter drowned in that river twenty years ago today."

1. What does Tony's decision to give the girl a free ride reveal about his character?

- A. He has a strong sense of duty and compassion for those in distress.
- B. He is a cynical person who usually mistrusts strangers.
- C. He was hoping to get a large tip from her mother later.
- D. He is naive and easily taken advantage of.

2. The girl insists that Tony should not come to the door, saying her mother is home. What literary technique does this detail primarily serve?
- A. A red herring, by distracting the reader from the girl's true identity.
 - B. Irony, by suggesting the mother will be angry.
 - C. Exposition, by providing background information about the family.
 - D. Foreshadowing, suggesting the mother knows something Tony does not.
3. When the mother says, "My daughter drowned in that river twenty years ago today," what is the mother's most likely emotional response?
- A. Deep sorrow mixed with the shock of a recurring event.
 - B. Anger at Tony for making up a cruel story.
 - C. Relief that someone finally returned the shoes.
 - D. Confusion because she has another living daughter.
4. What is the central conflict or tension in this story?
- A. The question of why the girl chose to jump into the river.
 - B. The external struggle between Tony and the girl's mother.
 - C. The internal struggle Tony has with working late.
 - D. The supernatural mystery regarding the girl's identity.
5. When the girl first speaks, she says, 'I just... I just fell in.' What does the repeated phrase, 'I just fell in,' suggest?
- A. She is waiting for Tony to interrupt and change the subject.
 - B. She is trying to emphasize that it was truly an accident.
 - C. She is unable to offer a more detailed or complex account due to shock or trauma.
 - D. She is a young child who does not have complex language skills.
6. What is the purpose of mentioning the girl's shoes were 'small, wet leather shoes'?
- A. To emphasize the fragility and youth of the girl.
 - B. To imply the shoes were the cause of her falling into the river.
 - C. To make the shoes seem precious and valuable.
 - D. To suggest the girl was a ballet dancer.
