THE ROYAL OBSERVATORY, GREENWICH

In London's Greenwich Park, next to the Thames, you'll find the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, a building which has an important place in the history of astronomical research. It is best known for marking the location of the prime meridian, a line that runs from the North Pole to the South Pole.

The observatory was commissioned by King Charles II and the building was completed in 1676.

Designed by Sir Christopher Wren, it was the first scientific research facility built in Britain. The first director of the observatory was John Flamsteed and the first building was named after him. Flamsteed was in charge of studying and mapping the stars, mainly so they could be used by sailors to avoid accidents at sea. In 1957, scientific work was moved to a different location; since 1960, the Greenwich site has been used as a museum.

Visitors to the museum can see a metal line on the ground which shows the path of the prime meridian. Between the years 1848 and 1972, all the world's major countries started using time zones which were based on Greenwich Mean Time (GMT), which is the local time at the prime meridian. For example, people in the UK often say GMT+1 for the time zone which is one hour ahead of the UK. However, it is more common in the rest of the world to use the term Universal Time, which is written UTC+1. To help people in London set their clocks and watches a time ball was installed on the roof of the observatory, which still drops every day at exactly 1 p.m.

It is popular for visitors to take pictures of each other with one foot on either side of the prime meridian line—that is, with one foot in the east and the other foot in the west. Since 1999, a green laser has shone across the London night sky, following the prime meridian north across the city. If you continued the line south, it would pass through the UK, France, Spain, Algeria, Mali, Burkina Faso, Togo, Ghana and end in Antarctica.

- What happened to the observatory in 1960?
 - It was closed to the public.
 - It became a place for scientific work.
 - It was used to help prevent accidents.
 - It was turned into a museum.
- What is the time difference between GMT and UTC?
 - GMT is one hour ahead.
 - GMT is one hour behind.
 - UTC is one hour behind.
 - There is no difference.
- Why does a ball drop every day on top of the observatory?
 - to remind people of the history of the observatory
 - to help people know the correct time
 - to remind people to eat lunch
 - to show people why GMT is important
- What do the countries mentioned in the last paragraph have in common?
 - They are considered part of the east and the west.
 - They are lit by a green laser.
 - They all share the prime meridian line.
 - They are in the GMT+1 time zone.
- What is the significance of the green laser light shining across London?
 - It represents the prime meridian line.
 - It reminds people of the presence of the observatory.
 - It helps people determine their location.
 - It leads people to the observatory from wherever they are in the city.

Task 7

Read the text below. Choose from (A-H) the one which best fits each space (1-6). There are two choices you do not need to use.

Did you know that we forget about 80% of the medical information a doctor might give us? This interesting fact came to light as a result of a study carried out at Utrecht University. What is (1) _____ we think we remember is wrong.

Why do you think this happens? Well, going to the doctor can make most people nervous, and (2) _____ we are more likely to concentrate on the diagnosis rather than on the treatment. Therefore, (3) _____ but with no idea what to do about it.

Here are some good tips to keep in mind when seeing a doctor. Always bring along a notepad to write down important pieces of information, such as (4) _____ or how to prepare for any medical tests you might need. What would be even better is (5) _____. In this way, you can replay it at home, where you are more likely to be able to understand your doctor's advice. If you believe the situation is serious or you're really worried, get a family member or a close friend to come with you to listen in.

Regardless of what you choose to do, there is one golden rule (6) _____ –to communicate effectively you need to ask the right questions. The 'Ask Me 3' program, an initiative of the Institute for Healthcare Improvement, advises patients to ask the following three questions every time they talk to a medical professional: 'What is my main problem, what do I need to do, and why is it important for me to do this?' These will help ensure that you understand the problem and how to deal with it in a rational way.

- A. when we are stressed
 - B. what we read about on the Internet
 - C. we go to the doctor
 - D. if your doctor agreed to let you record the conversation
 - E. how to take prescribed medication
 - F. even more interesting is that almost half of what
 - G. you should always take into account
 - H. we walk away knowing what is wrong with us
