Natural wonders

The Glow Worm Caves

In New Zealand, there is a cave with a lake and tiny lights on the ceiling. It looks like there are stars inside the cave. But these lights are from insects called glow worms. John from the UK says, 'The lights are much brighter than I expected. They are spectacular.'

Salar de Uyuni

In Bolivia, there is the world's biggest lake of salt. It is a real wonder all year round. But when it rains, the flooding of the area changes things a lot. Alice from Utah says, 'The water makes the ground look like the sky, with clouds in it.'

The Door to Hell

In Turkmenistan, in Central Asia, there is a big hole in the ground, which is 230 feet across, that has been on fire for 50 years. People call it "The Door to Hell." Tourists cannot go close, because temperatures can reach 1,000°C. Juan from Mexico says, 'It looks very scary, especially at night.'

The Giant's Causeway

In Northern Ireland, there is a natural formation of 40,000 stone columns which go out into the sea. They look like huge paths for a giant. The unique rocks are hexagons, shapes which have eight sides. Salim from the UAE says, 'It looks like someone put them together like the parts of a puzzle. I was surprised that they let us walk on the paths.'

Pamukkale

In Turkey, there is a place made of white stones around pools of warm water. It looks like a castle, but it is a natural wonder. People have washed in the pools for thousands of years. Jorge from Sweden says, 'I loved swimming in the pools. The water was wonderful!'
