

Read the text then answer the following questions:

In different parts of the world, the word football describes different games called codes. All football codes have some things in common: they are team games, and they are played with a ball. The name football started in medieval times because people played the game on foot, not on horses.

In Britain, football is officially called Association football, and people in the USA call it soccer. In this game, players use their feet, heads, and bodies, but only the goalkeeper can use hands. The rules were created in the late 19th century. The World Cup is held every four years.

In the USA, football means American football, where players mostly use their hands to score points. Football is very popular around the world.

1. What are different football games called?
2. What do all football codes have in common?
3. Why was the name football used in medieval times?
4. What do people in the USA call Association football?
5. Who can use hands in Association football?
6. When were the rules of Association football created?