Nguyen Binh Khiem (1491–1585) was one of the most famous Vietnamese poets, educators, and philosophers of the 16th century. He was born in Co Am village, Vinh Bao district, Hai Phong (an area that is now part of Hai Phong city, near present-day Hung Yen province). From an early age, he displayed remarkable intelligence and studied under well-known teachers. At the age of 44, he passed the national examination and achieved the highest rank, Trạng nguyên, in 1535 during the Mạc dynasty. He served as an official and advisor to the court for only seven years before resigning in 1542, disappointed by widespread corruption in the government. After leaving office, he returned to his hometown and lived a quiet, simple life in the countryside at Bach Van Am (White Cloud Hermitage). There, he devoted his time to teaching students, writing poetry, and farming. His poems frequently explored themes of nature, moral values, and predictions about the future. He stressed the importance of good character, honesty, and education for the young. Many of his prophecies and pieces of advice had a lasting influence on Vietnamese history, particularly during the conflicts and changes between the Lê and Mạc dynasties. Today, Nguyen Binh Khiem is widely remembered as “Trạng Trình” and a national symbol of wisdom.
