Because of its rich biodiversity and stunning beauty, the reef attracts millions of visitors every year.

The reef plays an important role in the marine ecosystem. It provides shelter and food for many types of fish, sea turtles, and coral species. Scientists and environmentalists often emphasize that protecting the reef is essential for maintaining ocean health. Activities such as responsible tourism and reducing water pollution can help preserve this fragile environment. In addition, educational programs have been developed to raise public awareness about reef conservation.
