Life in the future

Can you imagine life in the future? In one hundred years' time things will probably be very different! Cities will probably be built on other planets. However, people living on Mars definitely won't find life easier than on Earth because of the harsh atmosphere on Mars.

Jobs will be very different in the cities we build on other planets. There may be more scientists and technicians to look after oxygen and water supplies. Other jobs will be replaced by robots and computers. New kinds of transport will definitely be invented and more astronauts will be needed to pilot space shuttles travelling back to Earth. There will also be space buggies and hover crafts for people to get around in.

Sports and entertainment will be very different as well. People might do zero-gravity sports for exercise. Zero-gravity kung fu will be interesting to watch! There are so many possibilities, just imagining life in the future is incredible!

- In one hundred years the writer thinks
 - things will probably be different
 - people may not live on different planets
 - people probably won't live on Earth
- Life on Mars may be difficult because
 - the atmosphere on Mars is harsh
 - the Earth is colder than Mars
 - Mars is a cold, rocky planet
- In future space cities,
 - people may do the same jobs
 - everybody will do computer related jobs
 - some jobs will probably be replaced
- To travel around in the future, people will
 - go everywhere by space shuttle
 - use new kinds of transport
 - pilot their own shuttles
- Zero-gravity kung fu is something people might do
 - for work
 - for travel
 - for sport
- How does the writer feel about the future?
 - unhappy
 - calm
 - excited
