Young people today are living in a fast-changing world. They use smartphones, watch international movies, and follow global trends on social media. However, many of them are slowly losing touch with their own cultural traditions. This is becoming a serious problem in many countries around the world.

In the past, grandparents taught their grandchildren traditional songs, dances, and stories. Families celebrated cultural festivals together and wore traditional clothes on special days. But now, young people often find these customs boring or old-fashioned. They prefer modern entertainment and Western-style celebrations. As a result, the profound knowledge of their ancestors is gradually disappearing. Many teenagers cannot speak their native language properly or explain the meaning behind traditional ceremonies.

Some people think this change is natural and not important. They believe that adapting to modern life is more valuable than keeping old traditions. However, others worry that losing cultural identity will make society less diverse and interesting. They argue that traditions help people understand who they are and where they come from.

The question is: can we find a balance? Is it possible to enjoy modern life while still respecting and preserving our cultural heritage? Many experts believe the answer is yes, but it requires effort from both young people and older generations. We must make traditions more accessible and relevant to today's youth, showing them that culture is not just about the past—it's also about identity and belonging in the present.

B. Western culture is gradually replacing traditional customs in developing countries.
C. Grandparents should make more effort to teach cultural traditions to youth.
D. Modern technology is the primary reason for the loss of cultural identity.

Question 33: According to the passage, what do traditions help people understand?

- A. How to adapt successfully to modern technology and lifestyles.
B. Why Western-style celebrations are becoming more popular worldwide.
C. Their personal identity and connection to their cultural origins.
D. The importance of speaking their native language fluently.

Question 34: Which of the following is NOT mentioned as a sign that young people are losing touch with tradition?

- A. They prefer modern entertainment and Western-style celebrations.
B. Many cannot explain the meaning behind traditional ceremonies.
C. Many teenagers refuse to use smartphones and social media at home.
D. Some teenagers cannot speak their native language properly.

Question 35: What can be inferred from the passage about saving cultural heritage among youth?

- A. It will happen automatically as global trends become less popular.
B. It depends only on grandparents teaching traditional stories at home.

C. It can be solved by replacing old customs with Western-style celebrations.

D. It may work better if traditions are made easier to access and more relevant today.
