SOLAR ENERGY

Sunlight carries huge amounts of energy. You can feel the Sun's energy when sunlight warms your skin on a summer day. To capture the Sun's energy, scientists have developed solar cells, called photovoltaic cells. These cells convert sunlight into electricity.

When sunlight hits a solar cell, some of the light energy is absorbed. This light energy causes the particles in the solar cell to move faster, and the movement of these particles creates electricity.

In some places, large panels of solar cells harvest sunshine to make electricity for homes and businesses. Solar cells have been placed on cars and appliances, too. Since the Sun sends abundant free energy streaming toward the Earth 24 hours a day, people in many parts of the world, not just the sunniest places, have fixed solar cells and solar panels on the roofs of their houses or businesses to lower their energy costs.

Experts say that the huge installation of solar panels in sunny regions could generate enough electricity to supply an entire country. Capturing this energy can help overcome our decreasing energy supply. New ways to capture this energy are being developed all the time to maximize efficiency.

26. What is the source of solar energy?

- A. sunlight B. photovoltaic cells C. solar panels D. electricity

27. Solar cells are used _____.

C. to convert sunlight into electricity D. both A and C are correct

28. Which of the following statements is true?

- A. Solar cells absorb all of the light energy from the sun.
B. The light energy causes the particles to move faster to make electricity.
C. Solar energy can be used to power homes and businesses only.
D. Large solar panels have been placed on cars and appliances.

29. Where have people fixed solar panels?

- A. In the sunniest places B. Anywhere outside their houses
C. Inside their houses D. On the roofs of their houses

30. As used in line 11, "decreasing" most nearly means _____.
