In recent years, organic farming has grown in popularity as people become more interested in healthy food options and environmentally friendly practices. Organic farms avoid using chemical pesticides and fertilizers, which helps protect nature and improve the quality of the soil. Instead, they rely on natural methods like changing the types of crops they grow each year and using compost.

The demand for organic products has also increased significantly. More people now choose organic fruits, vegetables, and dairy products because they believe these items are fresher and safer for their families. Organic labels in supermarkets make it easier for customers to identify such products. However, these items often cost more than regular ones due to higher production costs and strict certification processes.

Governments in many countries play a crucial role in supporting organic farming by offering training programs and resources for farmers. These efforts encourage more farms to adopt organic methods, which benefit both the environment and public health. Despite the higher costs, organic farming continues to expand as consumers value the quality and sustainability of these products.

Question 31. What is the main idea of the text?
A. Organic farming is growing due to its focus on health and nature.
B. Governments support organic farming by creating new laws.
C. Organic products are fresher and safer than other foods.
D. Farmers use compost to improve the soil and avoid chemicals.
Question 32. How do organic farms protect the environment?
A. They lower costs by using compost and reducing production time.
B. They grow specific crops to avoid certification requirements.
C. They avoid chemicals and use natural farming methods instead.
D. They rely on labels in stores to make products easier to sell.
