

Read the text and choose T.F.DS

The Deel is a Mongolian traditional dress which is made of one piece of material. It has long sleeves, a high collar and buttons on the right shoulder. Each ethnic group living in Mongolia has its own individual Deel, distinguished by its cut, colour and trimming. Foreigners don't notice these differences, but are obvious to Mongolian

There are basically three types of deels, each worn during a particular season. The "Dan Deel" is made of light, bright materials and women wear it during the late spring and summer. The "terleg" is thicker than Dan Deel and both men and women wear. The winter Deel is made of sheep skin, or layers of row cotton. Deels have the same cut whether worn by men or women. Male deels are just wider than women's.

A Deel has wide, cup-shaped sleeves nicknamed "hooves". It is a highly useful feature of the Deel protecting the hands from the cold and from injuries while doing hard work. The khantaaz is a shorter traditional jacket, often made of silk, which is also buttoned to the side, and usually worn over the Deel. Read the text again and answer true (T), false (F) or doesn't say (DS).

Some Deels have buttons on the left shoulder. T F DS

Ethnic groups have different designs of Deels. T F DS

There is only one difference of colour. T F DS

Terleg is one of the three types of Deels. T F DS

Dan Deel is thinner than Terleg. T F DS

Women always wear Deels made of silk every season. T F DS

Some silk hooves don't protect hands from cold. T F DS