READING

5 Read the text about collecting things. Match the people (1–5) with the things they or their friends collect (A–E).

- 1 Rian _____
- 2 Magda _____
- 3 Angel _____
- 4 Santiago _____
- 5 Claire _____

- A Things you put on letters.
- B Something people put on their walls.
- C Information about meals.
- D Something children get when they buy a meal.
- E Something children take to bed with them.

Why do people collect things?

1
People collect things like coins and postcards. I've even got a friend who, as a child, collected toys that come with meals from a certain fast-food restaurant. My question is, 'Why?' I haven't ever thought about buying lots of the same thing so why do people do it? I'd love to hear your reasons!
Rian, Ireland

2
I've got over 300 teddy bears in my house. I can have a really hard day at work and I come home, sit on the sofa with one of the soft bears and I immediately feel less stressed. Not all things make me happy like this. I tried collecting key rings once but it just wasn't the same. They're not soft enough!
Magda, Poland

3
I think collecting things connects you to people. For me, it's food. I travel round the area collecting menus from restaurants and share my experiences with other food lovers online – I've made some good friends on forums and they make me laugh! Visiting different restaurants is also how I met my wife – she's a waitress and she was working at one of the restaurants I visited. I don't think she has any interest in food but she loves visiting new places with me.
Ángel, Spain

4
I don't have enough money to collect art myself but I believe people do it for many different reasons. They like the art, they help the artists, and for one friend of mine, it's because the art could be valuable in the future. They think they might make some money when they sell it.
Santiago, Mexico

5
I collect stamps because they teach me so much about different countries – their history, politics, art and geography. It's amazing what information a small piece of paper can hold. I started this hobby when I was ten. I remember getting so excited when I found a stamp I really wanted. But, you know, I still feel that way when I find a stamp today!
Claire, Scotland

My Experience with Slow Food

Do you ever have something to eat, and then ten minutes later it's gone? You don't remember eating it because you were on your phone or daydreaming. Well, that's happened to me many times so last summer, I decided to try 'slow food'. For many people, slow food is about the environment and helping local businesses. For me, it was about my health.

First, I started shopping at local markets so that I bought fresh local food and not food from abroad. Supermarket food often lasts longer, so I went shopping twice and not once a week as usual. I also bought less meat. I had two days a week without any meat at all, only vegetables. I love meat, so I didn't find it easy at all, but it was fine after a few weeks.

I tried to grow my own salad vegetables. It worked! I couldn't believe it! I ate some of the greens, but insects liked them, too, and ate a lot of them. Then, the tomatoes went black before they were ready to eat, so I lost those, too. It was nice to have some salad in sandwiches, but I didn't grow enough for a full meal. Maybe next year!

I cooked my own meals every day. I didn't buy fast food or order takeaway, so I knew what ingredients were in my meals. I went out for a few meals with friends, but I always picked something healthy. Actually, that's not true. I did sometimes have a burger and chips because I was bored with salads!

Finally, I ate my food more slowly than before. I usually eat really fast, but I paid more attention to the taste, and the smell. I looked at it more carefully, too, to see how it looked. I found that I enjoyed the taste of my food more but I sometimes started thinking about work or a friend and suddenly the meal was finished. I didn't pay attention. Old habits are hard to change!
