Inside the gym, there was a long, thin wooden bar on the floor. The coach said, "Today, we are learning about balance and coordination. You must walk on this bar and look straight ahead." Charlie felt afraid. He loved running and kicking balls, but he was not good at being slow and careful.

Last Saturday morning, Charlie woke up early and put on his favorite red trainers. He was very excited because it was his first day at the new sports club. He ran all the way to the sports center with his mother. He wanted to play football or basketball because he loved fast games.

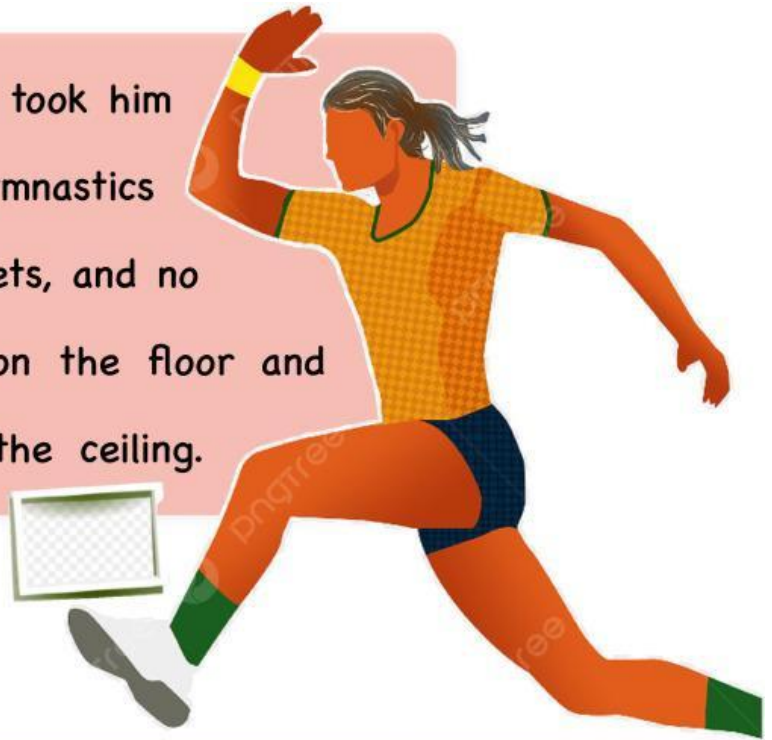

Finally, it was Charlie's turn. He put one foot on the bar, then the other. He stretched his arms out wide like a bird to help him stay up. Slowly, he walked all the way to the end without falling! The coach smiled and shouted, "Great job, Charlie! Your balance is fantastic today!" Charlie was very happy and proud.

Charlie watched his new friends first. Lily went first, but she fell off the bar after two steps. She laughed and tried again. Then, Jack tried, but he moved his arms too much and lost his coordination. It was much more difficult than it looked!

But when they arrived, his mother took him to a different room. It was a gymnastics room! There were no footballs, no nets, and no goals. There were only soft mats on the floor and some strange ropes hanging from the ceiling.
