Missy: Sheldon, did you really tell your history teacher that his lesson was "historically inaccurate"?

Sheldon: Yes. _____, I simply corrected a factual mistake. I didn't mean to embarrass him.

Missy: Maybe not, but honesty doesn't mean you have to say everything that comes into your head.

Georgie: Exactly. If I said everything I was thinking, Dad would probably _____.

George Sr.: Georgie, watch your mouth. I'm not going to _____you, but I might make you _____ if you keep exaggerating.

Meemaw: Your father has a point. There's a difference between being honest and being rude.

Sheldon: I fail to see the distinction. If something is true, why shouldn't I say it?

Missy: Because people have feelings! You can tell the truth without making someone feel terrible.

George Sr.: _____ feelings, your teacher called today. He wasn't angry about being corrected. He was frustrated because you interrupted him three times in front of the whole class.

Sheldon: Accuracy should take priority over pride.

Meemaw: Maybe. But kindness should take priority over proving you're right.

Georgie: Our school is _____ gossip. If you embarrass someone, everyone talks about it for weeks.

Missy: That's why people sometimes choose polite words instead of _____ ones.

Sheldon: So you're suggesting that I _____avoid the complete truth?

Meemaw: No. I'm suggesting that you choose the right time and the right words.

George Sr.: If someone keeps correcting people in front of everyone, don't be surprised if others _____ by refusing to help or include you.

Sheldon: That seems _____.

Missy: Maybe. But that's how people work.
