Eco-Tourism and Nature Preservation

Eco-tours have become a popular way for youngsters to spend their summer holidays. These tours allow people to visit natural environments while protecting the flora and fauna. Last week, Oliver's school organised an excursion to a national park on the outskirts of the city. The class monitor was responsible for guiding the students and helping them follow the park rules. During the excursion, they hired bicycles and cycled around the forest. They enjoyed taking photos of the magnificent scenery and looking at rare bird species in the trees.

For Oliver, the eco-tour was very relaxing and enjoyable. He had never visited a national park before, and he was amazed by the variety of plants and animals. While some students found cycling up the hills difficult, Oliver found it thrilling and motivating. The local instructor, who had worked in the park for ten years, showed them how to explore the area safely without damaging nature. Oliver believed that protecting these green spaces is important for the next generation. The school hopes to organise more eco-tours in the future to help students learn about environmental protection.
