

Reading: Life Before Smartphones

Many teenagers today cannot imagine life without smartphones or the Internet. However, life was very different twenty years ago.

When I was a child, my family used to live in a small town where everyone knew each other. We used to spend most of our afternoons playing outside because we didn't have tablets or video games. My friends and I would ride our bikes around the neighborhood, and we would invent games that kept us busy for hours.

Every Saturday morning, my father would take us to the local market. He would always buy fresh fruit, and afterward we would stop at a small bakery to buy warm bread. It became one of our favorite family traditions.

In the evenings, my grandmother would tell us funny stories about her childhood while we sat together in the living room. She used to know hundreds of stories, and we never got tired of listening to them.

Our school was also very different. We used to write all our homework by hand, and teachers used to use chalkboards instead of interactive screens. If we needed information for a project, we would go to the library because the Internet wasn't available at home.

Today, life is faster and technology has changed the way we communicate and learn. Although I enjoy modern technology, I sometimes miss those simple days when families would spend more time together and children used to create their own fun instead of looking at a screen.
