How to Stop Doomscrolling

Reading B1+ | Habits & Lifestyle

Doomscrolling is the habit of constantly scrolling through negative news or social media posts for a long time. Many people start doing it without thinking, especially before sleep or when they feel bored. Although it may seem harmless, doomscrolling can make people feel anxious, tired, and stressed.

Why It Is Hard to Stop

Social media platforms are designed to keep our attention. Every new post, video, or notification makes us want to keep scrolling. Our brain becomes used to this constant flow of information. As a result, it can be difficult to stop, even when we know it is not good for us.

Set Time Limits for Social Media

One simple way to reduce doomscrolling is to control the time you spend online. You can set a timer or use phone settings that limit social media use. For example, you may decide to check social media only two or three times a day.

Replace Scrolling with Better Habits

It is easier to stop doomscrolling when you replace it with another activity. Instead of scrolling, you can read a book, listen to music, go for a short walk, or talk with friends. These activities relax your mind and improve your mood.

Create Phone-Free Moments

Try to create small parts of the day when you do not use your phone. For example, avoid social media during meals or one hour before sleep. These phone-free moments can help your brain rest and reduce stress.

Take Back Control of Your Time

Doomscrolling can slowly take a lot of time from your day. By becoming aware of this habit and making small changes, you can regain control. Less scrolling means more time for real experiences, hobbies, and people around you.
