Communicating through art

Imagine suddenly losing movement in half of your body and the ability to talk. Strokes affect 15 million people around the world every year. Around five million of them are first attacks and the rest are recurrent attacks.

Sean Ryan, from London, used to play guitar in a band and he was very keen on sports, particularly football and tennis. One day four years ago, Sean was driving to an audition when he had a stroke. The talented 28-year-old woke up in a hospital bed and discovered that he couldn't talk or move the right side of his body. In time, with great effort, he was able to gesture when he wanted something. However, he believed people looked at him differently – like they felt pity for him or thought he was less of a person.

After he left hospital, Sean started using art as a therapy as well as a means of communication. He learned to use his left hand and painted himself playing guitar, kicking a football, lying in his hospital bed and sitting in his wheelchair. This was Sean's way of communicating his experience, without using words. His recovery took a long time but he never gave up.

Since his stroke, he's learned to talk again, slowly, but the use of his right side hasn't come back. Nowadays, 32-year-old Sean can do so much more thanks to the confidence that art has given him.

He has recently contributed some of his work to an exhibition called Communicating Without Words. The exhibition challenges many prejudices about disability. The exhibition features paintings, illustrations, photography and sculptures from people, like Sean, who have suffered a stroke at some point in their lives. The exhibition ends, appropriately, on October 29, World Stroke Day.
