The Absent-Minded Genius

My older brother Henry is a uniquely talented but incredibly absent-minded person. He is a tall, lanky young man in his early 20s with a pale complexion, deep dimples, and an untidy fringe that often covers his eyebrows. Henry has a great sense of humour, but his unpredictable behavior sometimes drives our parents up the wall. He can easily forget his keys, his wallet, or even his own birthday, but he never forgets a scientific formula.

Yesterday, Henry was invited to a prestigious university ceremony to receive an award for his inventive physics project. Our mother, who is quite strict about appearances, spent the whole morning reminding him to look trustworthy and neat. She prepared a formal, elegant suit for him. However, when Henry arrived at the grand hall, the entire audience was shocked. He was wearing the smart jacket, but underneath it, he had a casual, checked shirt, and instead of trousers, he was wearing his bright blue swimming trunks and slippers. He had completely forgotten to change his bottom half before leaving the house!

Most people would be devastated or deeply embarrassed by such a mistake, but Henry just smiled a wide, innocent smile. The university professors, who look up to his brilliant mind, found the situation hilarious. Henry received his award with great confidence. When he came back home, he told us he felt on top of the world, proving that true talent always shines, no matter what you are wearing.
