The rain poured relentlessly over the Northern Range, turning the dry asphalt streets of Port of Spain into rushing streams of muddy water. Drivers slowed their vehicles to a crawl, hazard lights blinking through the heavy mist. Standing under the narrow awning of a store on Charlotte Street, Kaelen clutched his school bag tightly against his chest, watching the brown water rise near the pavement edge. He sighed softly, knowing that the taxi stand would be overflowing with stranded commuters waiting to reach Chaguanas. Despite the shivering chill in the air, Kaelen smiled when he saw his father's yellow umbrella appearing through the rain-soaked crowd.
