

Word formation: adjective to adverbs

We are writing to inform you that, _____ (regrettable), the School Sports Day we had planned for 24th June, and which _____ (usual) takes place in the school grounds, will not be able to go ahead as planned. We have been _____ (energetic) preparing for the event for weeks now. However, we _____ (simple) don't want to risk having everyone outside in very stormy weather when this isn't _____ (complete) necessary. Our aim is to deal with the situation as _____ (responsible) as possible by postponing the Sports Day until 8th July. _____ (happy), all of our volunteers are also available on that date and we are _____ (extraordinary) grateful for their continued support. Instead of _____ (nervous) preparing for the Sports Day without knowing if it will actually be able to take place, _____ (sole) in order to stick the same date that we've always had for the Sports Day, we can now prepare for the later date with greater confidence.
