Means of transport around the world

Double-decker - London

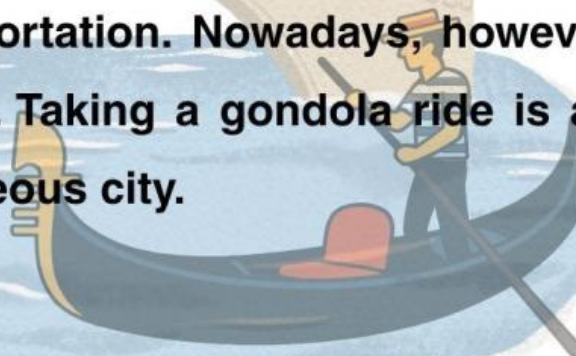

The iconic red double-decker buses are famous worldwide and represent one of London's most familiar sights. They feature two floors, and some have an open roof so that tourists can easily admire the city views. The first double-decker began carrying passengers around London more than sixty years ago, and they remain in high demand today. They offer an excellent and fairly cheap way to travel across the city.

Gondola - Venice

Venice is strongly associated with its canals and traditional long black boats, known as gondolas. These boats carry people throughout the city. During the 18th century, they were the primary mode of transportation. Nowadays, however, they are mainly used by tourists. Taking a gondola ride is a wonderful way to explore this gorgeous city.

Coco taxi - Cuba

Riding a coco taxi is a highly entertaining way to travel in Cuban cities like Havana. These unusual, funny-looking vehicles have three wheels and are shaped like a round coconut. They are painted either yellow or black. Despite their funny appearance, coco taxis are a fast and inexpensive transport option for getting around.

Cable cars - San Francisco

Traveling up and down the hilly streets of San Francisco in a cable car is a thrilling experience. Andrew Hallidie is the inventor of the cable car, and the very first one made its trip down Clay Street back in 1873. If you travel to San Francisco, you should definitely try riding one.
