E Reading

Part 1

Many people have decided to work from home recently. With more universities offering online courses, it's something many students have decided to do. Studying from home is more difficult than people think, so we've written some advice for students.

There is a big difference between doing homework in your bedroom and studying online full-time. So, you should make sure your study space is comfortable, and in a quiet place. You might have to talk about this with your parents. If you have to share a bedroom with a brother or sister, then you should agree a study schedule. This means organizing your day into times when the rest of the family promise to leave you alone and be quiet. For many students, breaking the day up into short sessions is a good way to study. Between 45 minutes and 1 hour is best.

One thing many students miss when they study from home is contact with other students. Of course, these days we're able to video call each other and have conversations on social media. However, real human contact is important. You must find time to meet up with other students. We suggest finding students who live near you and arranging study sessions at libraries or coffee shops regularly. You'll be surprised at how valuable these meetings can be for sharing ideas.

In tomorrow's article, we'll discuss how to use technology effectively.
