When a film is successful, there is only one obvious thing to do – make a sequel. Hollywood 1..... to produce individual films up until the 1970s. We think of Hollywood studios as successful, wealthy businesses but the 1980s were difficult times and the big studios were under pressure to make money. Several companies 2..... already disappeared, and that's when the studios started to realise the value of the sequel – a film that continues the story of an earlier film. We all know the films, Spiderman 3, Pirates of the Caribbean 3, Star Wars 3, or is it 6? Wouldn't the public 3..... see a completely new film? It seems not. Sequels are generally so popular with the public they 4..... need to be good to make money. In fact, 5..... they are really bad, they are almost certain to make money. For Hollywood it's a safer option, and it's good for the business, too. Making sequels of popular films 6..... the film company earn enough money to invest in more creative films that might not be so profitable.

But what about the most popular film to date, Titanic? Both main characters were dead before the final music started, and the set was at the bottom of the ocean. Surely this 7..... it impossible to even consider a sequel, or did it? One of the most popular videos on YouTube is an advertisement for Titanic 2. The short video clip shows the frozen body of Leonardo Di Caprio, Jack in the film, being taken out of the water and brought back to life in a scientific laboratory. There are scenes of him running through streets looking for his lost love, Rose. It is so realistic, many people feel that it 8..... be true. The clip is, in fact, a collection of scenes from several Di Caprio films in the past. It all looks very professional, but surely part of the trick is Hollywood's love of sequels. If it 9..... for the popularity of sequels in Hollywood, nobody would 10..... believed that this film was real. With millions of visitors watching the video on YouTube already, Titanic 2 the Sequel may soon become as popular as the original film.
